

OFFICIALS WANT PARK PROVISIONS

Will Request Owners of Additions to Cooperate

TO BE BEAUTY SPOTS

Private Citizens Are Showing Marked Interest in Improving Parks

City officials are to have a request written of plated additions to the city of Tulsa to provide at least a small block of ground for a park or recreation center. It is not probable that this request will take the form of an official order, as there is some doubt in the mind of City Attorney Frank E. Duncan as to whether such an order could be enforced. Its enforcement for the present will rest in the anticipated cooperation between the city and addition owners. Duncan's reason for desiring the force of such an order is that the addition to outside the city limits and the jurisdiction of the city until it is annexed, and that those who now possess the land could easily deny city improvements and privileges because the company from which they bought their property neglected to provide a park.

The size of recreation centers in these new additions is to be determined by the size of the addition as a whole. Officials hope that none of the additions will be so large as to block a street, but in the larger additions they may be two to four blocks. Numerous cities over the country have adopted this course and possess dozens of beauty spots that serve "breathing spots" for residents of congested neighborhoods and especially their children, who need plenty of space and fresh air in order to stimulate physical growth and bodily health.

N. G. Henthorne, president of the park board, is especially hopeful that owners of additions will cooperate with the city and provide these small parks. Even though for the present there are no conveniences besides benches, such parks will prove inviting to those who have no desire to play. With the passing of time, improvements will be added, he says, and Tulsa will eventually be dotted with recreation centers and playgrounds that will serve every section of the city.

Private citizens have recently shown marked interest in local parks and are working for the improvement and recreation for children. The movement started by Frank H. Reed, who donated a wading pool at Locust park, is spreading. He expects to donate another pool for Admiral park, and Lallie Lyons is to provide one for Central park. Although the Locust park pool has not been officially dedicated, it is virtually filled each evening with children who live in the southeast part of the city.

MIAMI, May 31.—The executive committee of the county fair bureau, which has been operating for some time as a temporary organization, has decided that a permanent organization should be effected and permanent officers elected. To that end a meeting at the courthouse has been called for next Saturday afternoon, at which only paying members will be allowed to vote.

ENID, May 31.—There were tourists from eight different states enjoying the hospitality of the new park, arranged especially for them, this week. There are six motor roads running into Enid and after long hours of travel a cool, comfortable resting place with all necessary equipment to camp right is a delight to a motorist.
